Passage 1

New Delhi - If all the people waiting to have a toilet in their homes in India were to form a queue, the line would have 774 million people and stretch to the moon, the non-profit group WaterAid said in a report released on the eve of the UN World Toilet Day on Thursday.

The study titled It's No Joke: The State of the World's Toilets 2015 highlights health problems faced by 2.3 billion people across the world who do not have access to safe private toilets. "Diarrhea is one of the three most common killers of young children globally, along with pneumonia and malaria. Most of these deaths - 58% of them - could be prevented by clean water, sanitation and good hygiene including hand washing with soap," the report said.

Cities in India have been growing at an incredible pace. Unserviced slums, combined with a cultural preference for defecation in open spaces, mean the country has 774 million people now waiting for household toilets. The report also ranked India first among countries having the most people defecating in the open per km².

The resulting health crisis is serious with more than 140,000 children under 5 dying each year in India from diarrhea. 40% of all children have stunted growth and there are high rates of maternal and newborn mortality.

Passage 2

This year, Jennifer Lawrence topped the Forbes list of highest-paid actresses. The 25-year-old gave her final performance as Katniss Everdeen, in Mockingjay Part 2, the last film of the Hunger Games series. The world has watched Lawrence grow up on screen over the years of the series. “I love being part of a film that can spark conversation,” Lawrence says. “It’s been such an incredible chapter in my life.”

The Oscar winner has also sparked conversation as an advocate for equal pay for women and men in her industry. Lawrence wrote an online essay on the pay gap in Hollywood, titled “Why Do I Make Less Than My Male Co-Stars?” Earlier in the year, hackers released private Sony e-mails that revealed that she was paid less for acting in the movie American Hustle than her male co-stars. She says she blamed herself for not being a tougher negotiator. Since her essay went public, other actresses have come out protesting their comparatively small paychecks.

Throughout her career, Lawrence has also worked to try to promote healthy body images. When she took on the role of Katniss in the Hunger Games series, she refused to appear unhealthy on camera. Though the book, written by Suzanne Collins, describes Katniss as very thin, Lawrence did not waver in her commitment to maintaining her healthy, strong body.

   4. Lawrence was angry with her male co-stars in American Hustle for unequal pay
   5. Lawrence’s essay was accidentally made public without her consent

36. What message does the writer want to convey in the last paragraph?
   1. Lawrence was not suitable for the role of Katniss because she wasn’t thin enough.
   2. The producers should have made Lawrence lose weight to make her healthier.
   3. The series’ writer wasn’t pleased that Lawrence didn’t make an effort to look thin.
   4. Lawrence maintained her good health even though her role required her to look the opposite.
   5. Lawrence wants the public to remember her for her beautiful looks.
Passage 3

In 1911 the United States Postal Service (USPS) offered savings accounts to customers too poor or too suspicious to bank elsewhere. The innovation followed the stock market collapse and a run on banks in 1907. Immigrants flocked to the accounts: In 1917 some 70 percent of postal savings accounts were opened by newcomers, although those groups made up only 14 percent of the population. By 1966, however, the service was terminated because of a gradual decline in popularity and competition from traditional banks.

A January report by the USPS inspector general proposed bringing postal banking back as a way to solve two problems: strengthen the independent agency’s fragile finances as well as provide banking services in communities that are notoriously underserved by the financial sector. The report says that some 34 million households (a quarter of all American families) do not have a bank account, and the average household in this group spends $2,412 a year on interest and fees when using other financial services. The Postal Service already processes money orders, debit card transactions and international wire transfers.

The majority of post offices (59 percent) are in zip codes with zero or one bank branch, and post offices are positioned to fill the gap: they are widespread, under-utilized and could offer services without the high fees that traditional banks charge for low-balance accounts. The inspector general concludes that postal banking could bring in an estimated $8.9 billion a year.

37. The phrase ‘the independent agency’ refers to the ________.
   1. US federal government
   2. US Postal Service
   3. financial sector
   4. inspector general

   3. reveal how a commercial bank earns its extra income
   4. explain why some people don’t have a bank account
   5. show that banking services need to be improved

   1. is populated by poor people
   2. is in a zip code ending with a zero
   3. may not have a commercial bank nearby
   4. does not welcome financial companies
   5. has not received enough financial support from the State

Passage 4

(1) In a recent study, researchers asked 75,000 Chinese women ages 40 to 70 whether they exercised when they were between 13 and 19 years old, and if so, how much they exercised. The researchers also examined the women's general lifestyle habits, including exercise, in adulthood. They then followed the women for almost 13 years, examining how many of them died from cancer, cardiovascular disease and other causes. During the study, 5,282 of the women died, including 2,375 who died from cancer and 1,620 who died from cardiovascular disease.

(2) The researchers found that the women in the study who did at least some exercise as teens, up to 80 minutes weekly, had a 16 percent lower risk of death from cancer, and a 15 percent lower risk of dying from any causes over the 13-year study than the women who did not exercise at all during adolescence. However, doing more exercise was not linked with any additional benefit, in terms of longevity. The women who exercised for more than 80 minutes weekly during their teen years had a 13 percent lower risk of dying from all causes during the study period, compared with those who did not exercise in adolescence.

(3) "Our results support the importance of promoting exercise participation in adolescence to reduce mortality in later life and highlight the critical need for the initiation of disease prevention early in life," Sarah J. Nechuta said.

(4) The study also found that for women who exercised both when they were teens and as adults, the risk of dying from any cause during the study was 20 percent lower than for those who did not exercise at all. The former group’s risk of dying from cardiovascular disease was 17 percent lower, and their risk of dying from cancer was 13 percent lower, than women who did not exercise.

(5) While the study found an association, it is not clear whether exercising during adolescence can actually cause lower mortality later in life. _______, multiple mechanisms are likely involved in the link seen in the study, Nechuta said. "One potential mechanism is that if you exercise as an adolescent, you may be more likely to exercise as an adult, and you may be more likely to have healthy behaviors that then contribute to the reduced risk of death," she told Live Science.
41. The phrase ‘the former group’ (paragraph 4) refers to the _________.
   1. participants who never exercised
   2. women who stated exercising as adults
   3. subjects who exercised from teenage years to adulthood

   2. The participants’ gender
   3. The causes of the subjects’ death
   4. The purpose of the study
   5. The length of the study

44. Which of the following can be inferred from the passage?
   1. Some of the subjects who died during the study were over 90 years old.
   2. The subjects were all healthy at the beginning of the study.
   3. No subjects who worked out in their teenage years died during study.
   4. On average, women are more likely to die of cancer than men.
   5. Exercising at a young age can reduce the risk of dying from cancer in women.

45. Which of the following is Nechuta likely to agree with?
   1. Cardiovascular disease can be 100% prevented if you exercise.
   2. The more you exercise as a teen, the longer you live.
   3. Healthy habits can be formed and the sooner the better.
   4. On average, women die more of cancer than heart disease.
   5. The older you start exercising, the higher risk of cancer you have.
